

Be a UN Volunteer, be inspiration in action

// How can a UN Volunteer complement the work of the United Nations?

Volunteerism is one of the most vital delivery mechanisms for social, environmental and economic transformation, ensuring a lasting impact with its ability to change people's mindsets, attitudes and behaviours. People become actors of change and equal partners in the attainment of local, national and international progress towards sustainable human development and global peace.

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme recognizes the shared universal values underpinning volunteerism – free will, commitment, equity, engagement, solidarity, compassion, empathy and respect for others. Since its establishment in 1970, UNV has enabled thousands of volunteers around the globe to contribute to advancing human development and fostering progress towards a better world.

// National UN Volunteers

UNV manages a value-driven talent pool of global citizens motivated to contribute to the peace and development work of the United Nations. Through their expertise, national UN Volunteers enable the effective delivery of programmes and mandates of partner UN entities. Together we can tackle poverty and inequality to advance peace and social cohesion worldwide.

national UN Volunteers come from all walks of life. In the health sector UNV's partners have requested volunteers knowledgeable and experienced as general medical practitioners, medical specialists and doctors specialized in public health; staff counselors and psychologists; midwives and nurses, dentists, pharmacists and laboratory technicians. Other functions in demand include: protection, resettlement/reintegration/repatriation, refugee status determination officers, monitoring, evaluation and reporting specialists, programme development and project management specialists, public information and communication specialists, rule-of-law, judicial monitoring, access to justice, security sector reform, policy specialists, statisticians, community mobilization experts, entrepreneurship and employment. In technical and support areas: aviation, movement and transport control, ICT and telecommunication, civil engineering, supply management, logistics and procurement, human resources and training of trainers.

National UN Volunteers María Celia Sahuanay Calsin and Roberto Carlos Loaiza Dueñas talk with a beneficiary of the solid waste management project, part of the UNDP/UNEP/UNV Poverty Environment Initiative (PEI) in Arequipa, Peru. Solid waste management is a serious environmental and social concern. Waste is not separated but often dumped into rivers, contaminating the water. At the same time, illegal recycling is a widespread practice, seeing the poorest people collecting waste in dangerous conditions.

UNV is utilizing the potential of volunteerism, as well as the engagement of young people, to enhance the impact of this project. National UN Volunteers are training local volunteers how to correctly separate solid waste and formalizing the engagement of these 'informal recyclers' into associations to fight the negative impact of waste on the environment and on people's health.

// Why become a national UN Volunteer?

Becoming a UN Volunteer is a unique opportunity to enrich personal and professional experiences, and it benefits both the individual volunteer and the society at large.

In 2014, over 6,300 UN Volunteers from over 100 different professions served with 38 United Nations entities in 121 countries. Some 61 per cent served in assignments in Sub-Saharan Africa, 15 per cent in the Arab States, 10 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 9 per cent in Latin America and Caribbean and 5 per cent in Europe and the CIS. Of these UN Volunteers 72 per cent served as international and 28 per cent on national assignments, 81 per cent were from the South and 41 per cent were women.

National UN Volunteers serve in their own country and combine their professional expertise in a wide range of fields with in-depth knowledge of local conditions. They respond to development priorities and needs in their home countries when faced with poverty and socio-economic challenges, humanitarian crises, conflict and post-conflict challenges and situations of fragile peace.

National UN Volunteers are recruited at country level to serve in their own countries or countries in which they have refugee status, particularly in support of national capacity building initiatives. Their assignments can be an initial contract of 6-12 months, generally with a possibility to extend to maximum 4 years. Short-term assignments of three months or less are also required from time to time by UNV's partners.

- Strong commitment to the values and principles of volunteering;
- Respect for diversity and a willingness to work in a multi-cultural environment;
- The ability to adjust to changing and at times difficult living and working conditions.

// What support is provided to national UN Volunteers during their assignment?

- Settling-in-Grant for in-country resettlement (if applicable) calculated on the duration of assignment, which is paid at the beginning of the assignment;
- Volunteer Living Allowance (not a salary) intended to cover basic living expenses, which is paid each month;
- Travel to duty station on appointment and return/repatriation at the end of assignment as applicable;
- Life, health and permanent disability insurance;
- Annual leave;
- Resettlement allowance for in-country resettlement calculated based on the duration of assignment, which is paid upon satisfactory completion of the assignment.

// What other opportunities to volunteer does UNV offer?

UNV maintains a database which is a dynamic pool of talent fed by over 50,000 registrations annually and tailored to meet the needs of our partners. The majority of assignments are filled from candidates on UNV's database, however from time-to-time, difficult, highly specialized or high volume assignments are advertised on the UNV website, in specialized media, professional associations and on social media/networks.

International UN Volunteers serve in countries other than their own, and are highly-skilled individuals who work actively with development partners and within communities, responding to national priorities and needs.

A UN Youth Volunteer programme for 18 to 29 year olds was launched in 2014 in response to UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon's call on UNV to support his Five-Year Action Agenda with its extensive expertise in youth volunteer placement.
